Portals to Hell

It's mid-September. The sun is setting, the leaves are rustling, and the hallways are darkening. Inside, cameras are being set up as people scurry around, pulling on jackets and hats as the temperatures cool as night descends. Looks like any other fall evening at Haunted Hill View Manor. But this night is different...

A Grand Entrance

There is a building that sits atop a small hill just off of Route 65 in New Castle, Pennsylvania. A large, red-brick architecture that holds many mysteries and unnoticed beauty. Some may not have given the archway above the main entrance doorway much of a thought, it is just a doorway that leads to the reason they are there, ghost hunting. Often times the beauty of the architecture is just given a passing glance...
